

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The thesis is an outcome of my research work undertaken for the partial fulfillment of the requirements for the Degree of the Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) in the Faculty of Management Studies at The Maharaja Sayajirao University of Baroda (MSU), Vadodara, India. At this stage, I acknowledge the immense contribution made in the course of research by eminent personalities both in the University and outside.

First of all, I am indebted to my respected guiding Professor Dr. Surendra Sundararajan for his able guidance and continuous supervision throughout each and every phase of this study. His razor-sharp mind, profound knowledge and critical insights of the issues involved in this research have led the research to arrive in its desired end. He is not only a guide to me but a local guardian as well. His encouragement, many times, drove me from the hospital bed to the research desk, and from a state of loss of confidence to feelings of hope. From him, I have learned lots of things off the topic as well including the virtues of discipline, labour, persistence, confidence, proper utilisation of time, humanitarian behaviour and compassion. Every time I met and discussed with him, I came out afresh with optimism and vigour and new enthusiasm to work. He always privileged me with easy access to him despite his heavy preoccupations. I cannot fully express how grateful I am towards him. I am filled with deep sense of gratitude as my heart leaps out and head bows down to him. I strongly feel that only very fortunate few could get an opportunity to work under such a great person.

I am thankful to the Dean and staff of the Faculty of Management Studies, The MSU, for providing me the administrative cooperation and arrangements including a separate well-equipped research room during the entire period of the study. I am equally grateful to my employers, Nepal Rastra Bank (NRB), the Monetary Authority and Central Bank of Nepal, for providing me the necessary facilities and leave of absence for three years to undertake and complete this study.

Mr. Tula Raj Basyal, Executive Director (Retd.) of NRB and former Senior Economic Advisor, Government of Nepal, is the key source of inspiration and motivation to undertake and complete this research. Mr. Nara Bahadur Thapa, Executive Director, Dr. Prakash Kumar Shrestha, Director, and Mr. Ishwori Prasad Bhattarai, Deputy Director, all of NRB, have been very kind to me in terms of freely sharing their wise ideas and constantly helping me in one way or another. Prof. Dr. M. Sreehari, formerly of The MSU, and Mr. Suman Neupane, Deputy Director of NRB, have been kind enough to share their expertise in the statistical dimension. I want to thank all the people from The MSU family who directly or indirectly helped me during my stay in Gujarat. My thanks are also due to the efficient management and friendly officials of The MSU's Shrimati Hansa Mehta Library and Faculty of Management Studies Library as well as Tribhuvan University Central Library, Kathmandu, for rendering their kind cooperation by way of readily supplying literature essential for this research. I am heavily indebted to all of them.

I want to express my deepest sense of gratitude to my intimate friends Mr. Raghav Biyani and Mr. Arup Chakraworti who took care of me while I was hospitalized in Vadodara during my first year of the research. At this moment, I want to record my gratitude to my parents, beloved wife and son for their sacrifice during my absence. It is mainly their love and affection which have served as my sources of inspiration and strength for undertaking and completing this academic exercise.

In particular, the views expressed in this thesis do not in any way represent those of NRB and The MSU. All the responsibilities for opinions expressed in the thesis as well as for errors of omission and commission are mine.
