

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The present dissertation is the outcome of an intensive investigation into the processing of interest in Indian environment. It has been felt that interest is a product of environment and some potential motive forces. The developmental aspect of interest has been taken into consideration because of its bearing upon educational and vocational guidance. In pursuing the struggle for meeting the challenges of the investigation, I have been bestowed with a number of favours from various sources. In the matter of collection of data, the Principals of a number of institutes and the Deans of the various Faculties have extended their ungrudging help and co-operation. My heartfelt gratitude goes to my guiding teacher Dr. S. Bhattacharya, whose constant stimulation and unreserved help have made my ambition a reality. Without his invaluable guidance this strenuous work could not have received a final shape.

Lastly, I owe a debt of gratitude to all who have directly or indirectly contributed the progress of investigation.
