

Conclusion:

The tribal folk music of Rajpipla is an immense treasure worth savouring. It springs from the simple and free lifestyle of these innocent people which is in harmony with nature. It has evolved for over centuries to arrive in its current form. With the fast changing life style and culture, this form of music is disappearing very fast. At current rate it seems that in the next few decades, we may actually lose it almost completely. This work is a humble attempt to capture the musical essence of this wonderful resource, so that forthcoming generations may connect themselves with their roots and relish this ancient form of folk art.