

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Prof. Shagufa Kapadia, Head, Dept. of Human Development and Family Studies, Faculty of Home Science, the M.S. University of Baroda and my advisor, for her mentoring and patience. Her training in research made me a critical thinker. Her encouragement and persistence helped me to complete my research successfully.

Prof. Prerana Mohite, Dean, Faculty of Home Science, for her valuable suggestions and support.

Prof. Lutz Eckensberger, Director, German Institute of Educational Research, Frankfurt, Germany, for his contribution in formulating research ideas. I am grateful to him for providing me an opportunity to visit his department where we had effective discussions with Karen and Iris that led to thinking of many 'taken for granted' cultural aspects of marriage partner selection in India.

Prof. Mary Ann Maslak, Associate Professor, St. Johns University, New York, United States, for her great interest in my research and sharing her thoughts about qualitative data analysis that helped in analyzing my data.

All the staff members of the dept. of Human Development and Family Studies for their critical feedback during the seminars.

Saurabh, my husband, for being a friend and driving me to different parts of Delhi during data collection. His belief in my ability would often reflect in his encouraging words "I know you can do it!"

My mother-in-law, for her encouragement and taking great care of my son in my absence that helped me to concentrate on my research. Special thanks to my son, Sarthak, for being so cooperative and making my 'padhai' easier. Thanks to my father-in-law, sisters-in-law (Sweta and Gunjan) and brothers-in-law (Gaurav and Amit) who contributed in many significant ways.

My parents, for their encouragement and unstinting support at every step of my research. Thanks to both my elder brothers and sisters-in-law who were always concerned about my research and sent in peppy notes periodically.

My friend, Rachana, for her encouragement and helpful critiques and comments on my research proposal and chapters. She has always been there for me for all these years, since I registered for the doctoral program till the submission of thesis.

My friends, Vivek and Ruchika, for their interest in my research and willingness to help at any time. Special thanks to Ruchika for helping me identify subjects for the study in Delhi.

Jain uncle and aunty, for their gracious hospitality, special love and care. It was like another home away from home.

Last, but not the least all the women who participated in the study, for sharing a part of their life with me. The sharing of their diverse experiences and relating to them as an educated and married woman myself, all contributed to the enrichment of the research process.
