

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The present work is a culmination of the efforts of not only the candidate but a large number of people who lent time, motivation, and other critical supports through which the efforts of the candidate translated into the present thesis. These people have provided the mentorship, love and support through which the candidate could pass through one of the most important and enriching phases of his life.

Sincere gratitude is due to my Guide and Mentor – Prof. K. Shanmugan who played the role of not only a PhD Guide but also of a mentor who helped me transform myself from an aspirant to a researcher. The years spent working with him have been the most rewarding and enriching experiences that taught me much more beyond only research work. He has been the pivotal force which kept the flames of perseverance, commitment and passion ignited in my heart and spirit. I bow to his kindness for having been my Guru in this demanding journey of PhD.

I express my sincere gratefulness to the Smt. Hansa Mehta Library for the rich and engaging academic resources that have enabled the candidate to access important data, literature and other relevant sources for the research work. Earnest thanks are due to The Indian Econometric Society which provided an enriching platform to engage with fellow researchers, esteemed experts and a diverse set of intellectual perspectives. I thank Dr. Hersch Sahay, Assistant Professor, Department of Economics, Pondicherry University, for providing access to important academic resources and for providing useful suggestions. I also extend sincere gratitude to Prof. S. Madheswaran, Institute for Social and Economic Change (ISEC), Bengaluru, Karnataka for his critical inputs in the early stages of my PhD.

My deepest regards are due to Ela, my parents, and my wife Devanshi. These are people who always stood by me during this arduous journey. They provided a healthy, loving and conducive atmosphere within which I could pursue my work with peace and positivity.

I again thank the Indian Council for Social Science Research (ICSSR) for providing me the opportunity to work as a full-time Doctoral Fellow during the years 2016-17 to 2018-19. I also express my regards and thankfulness to the Department of Banking and Insurance, Faculty of Commerce, where I am currently serving as an Assistant Professor for providing a cooperative and conducive environment to pursue my research work. In particular, I thank the Head of the Department – Prof. (Dr.) Ketan R. Upadhyay Sir for his continuous support during the journey.

The responsibility of errors, if any, are solely that of the author of this thesis.
