

Acknowledgement

First of all I am immensely grateful to my respected parents who put all their efforts so that today I am able to engage with an education. I am grateful to my father Ignas Pankhras Parmar who give me much information about the early Christianity and conversion which helped me to make my way. I am grateful to my mother Anasuya Parmar, my brothers Agnel Parmar and Ashish Parmar who constantly supported me without which I could not have completed this dissertation.

I would like to thank Prof. Sudha Pandya, former Head of the English Department, The M.S.University for her support in my initial days as SRF I am grateful to Professor Hitesh Raviya, Head, Department of English, The M. S. University for the constant support and attention. As far as the study is concerned, it is my privilege to work with Professor Deeptha Achar who supported me not only for selecting the topic but her guidance and support made my effort somewhat useful. I would like to thank and acknowledge the keen insights, critical inputs and apt guidance of my research guide Prof. Deeptha Achar. She has helped me to widen my scope, perspective, tested my limits and introduced me to different knowledge systems, without which my research would not be possible. Her liberal yet disciplined nature gave me enough freedom to pursue my paths under her constant guidance. Even my future endeavors will be indebted to her. Even whenever I need any kind of support she was always there. Though I am very lazy and slow learner in writing the dissertation my guide taught me everything very calmly.

Further, I should not miss the chance to say thanks to Rev. Sanjay Malaviya who provided me with his own study material to prepare my study. I also thank Mr. Asthavadi who provided me the primary materials when I did not find anywhere else and more importantly the information. Though these are very old book and it was not possible to make a copy of it, he was ready to give me those books which was very precious to him. Not only this but Mr. Asthavadi gives his time in his busy schedule and guide me everywhere I need. He also provided me other study material.

I also want to thank Rev. Noel, Principal of Gujarat United School of Theology archive who allowed me to refer books from the archive. Though he is a very busy person he always supported me and allowed me to use archival material whenever I want. At this point I should not forget to thank Father Mattam, Principle of the archival house, Sevasi, Baroda who allowed me to use study material from his archive. I want to thank Rev. Manashah Bhuraji who gives me information about the early Christianity and the early convertors.

I am also very grateful to the Gujarat Books and Tract Society who provided me theological books and helped me whenever I want. I want to thank the Fathers of Anand, Ahmedabad, Roman Catholic Church and Church of North India for helping me and providing me the information which helped me a lot in my study. I thank to Dr. Rajan Barrett who provided me study material as well as shared information regarding Bible translation.

When I am acknowledging most important people how can I forget to thank my Ph.D. colleagues Lizi, Lancy, and Bhavesh for support and guidance whenever I need. I am very grateful to Bhavesh who spend time from his busy schedule and personally come over here to help me in the last over things. Even I want to say thanks to Bageshree for the editing the drafts.

I would like to thank all the teachers of Department of English, MSU, for their direct and indirect help with this research. I would like to thank Rameshbhai and Pallavi Ben for their help with administrative work and support.

I would like to thank my husband Mahesh, who has spent many sleepless nights with meduring the writing of this dissertation, who has cared for me and supported and motivated me with his love, care and also sometimes share information regarding my study all these years. I am also obliged to my husband without him even I cannot imagine to complete this journey. I would like to acknowledge here, also, the contribution of my nine-month son- Viom for giving me hope for a better future, and making my life content and full of happiness and joy.
