

" Money may no longer be the master but, if it has become the servant, it is a servant without whose services the new masters cannot live and who, if not well treated, plays very nasty tricks on them. The position of money in the whole pattern of social and economic policy may not be completely dominant but it has remained pivotal".

J.W. Beyen in
'Money in a Maelstrom'