

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I am indeed fortunate to have Dr. T. R. Bishnoi of the Department of Economics of the M. S. University of Baroda as my research guide. The present study is an outcome of his scholarly guidance, cooperation and constant support throughout my research. I deeply appreciate his abiding interest in my work.

I thank Professor Maya Shah who was then Head of the Department when I got myself registered as a Ph.D. student at the Department of Economics. She made inquiries about my progress and encouraged me from time to time. I am also indebted to Professor Bhavna Kantawala, Head of the Department Economics for providing me necessary facility and support in my thesis work. She always inquired affectionately about my progress whenever I visited the Department of Economics for attending seminars and workshops during these years. I express my gratitude to thank all my teachers at the Department for their continuous support to my work.

At this moment, I would like to thank Professor R. J. Shah, Dean, Faculty of Arts for his continuous interest in my work. I am grateful to the authorities of the M. S. University of Baroda for having provided all the facilities and conducive atmosphere to me to complete this work.

I am thankful to the Library staff of Smt. Hansa Mehta Library, Vadodara and S. P. B. English Medium College of Commerce, Surat for providing me excellent library facility and support. I also express my heart felt gratitude to my Principal Dr. V. D. Naik and colleagues at the S. P. B. English Medium College of Commerce, Surat for their support for my work.

My parents took keen interest in my work from the very beginning. My father Professor Niranjan Pandya helped me in finalizing the research topic and made number of useful suggestions. My mother Professor Sudha Pandya was an unfailing source of continuous encouragement. I do not know how adequately to express my sense of gratitude to both of them.

I specially thank my wife Hira and my young daughter Devanshi for bearing with my long absence from home during this work. I am keenly aware of the discomfort caused to them and I appreciate their constant encouragement to me.

Last but not the least, I would like to thank one and all who have directly or indirectly been helpful in my study.
