

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This work was undertaken and completed under the guidance of Professor V.N. Kothari, Professor of Economics at the Department of Economics, Faculty of Arts, Maharaja Sayajirao University of Baroda, Baroda-2.

I have incurred debt to many friends in the course of organising and completing my work. My greatest debt is to Professor V.N. Kothari. It is simply not possible to express in words my deep sense of gratitude to him for his able guidance, encouragement and inspiration throughout. He gave me his time most willingly and in critical moments in my work instilled in me a sense of confidence. Above all, I am very grateful for the affection which he had shown for me and the interest which he evinced in my work and progress. He was very kind in making suitable adjustments in my teaching work load in the Department so as to enable me to make speedy progress in my research work. I am equally indebted to my all colleagues in the Department, who, willingly and cheerfully, shouldered larger teaching work for my convenience and for the interest and goodwill which they showed in my work and progress. I am particularly thankful to Dr. S.R. Hashim, my colleague, with whom I had many fruitful discussions on intricate issues which cropped up in the work. My thanks are also due to my colleague Dr. M.M. Dadi who helped me in the use and interpretation of statistical techniques. He was ever willing to help. Dr. Madhukar Maharaja of the Gujarat State Fertilisers Company, Baroda, was another friend who not only advised me on statistical matters but also made me available certain up-to-date data from his office. He made useful comments and suggestions.

At this stage I cannot forget to remember a few distinguished persons with whom I had the opportunity to work in the past. I gratefully remember Professor J.C. Sandesara, the Professor of Industrial Economics, University of Bombay for initiating and inspiring me to undertake research in the field of wages. Professor I.S. Gulati and Dr. L.S. Vankataraman were very kind to me and took deep interest in my work and progress. I am very grateful to them. I also gratefully remember my teacher Professor A.J. Borde and Professor J. Alexander both of Wilson College, Bombay who took keen interest in my studies and extra-curricular activities.

The Visiting Fellowship awarded to me for the summer 1970 by the Centre of Advanced Study in Economics at the University of Bombay, gave me access to the staff and the Library of the University of Bombay. At the centre I had very useful discussions with Dr. L.K. Deshpande and he helped me to contact various agencies for data in Bombay. Professor B.V. Mehta now of the South Gujarat University and Dr. V.M. Rao, Senior Research Officer, Department of Economics, University of Bombay also took keen interest in my work.

I am highly indebted to the Chief Inspector of Factories, Government of Gujarat for extending to me all the facilities during the period I had to work in his office and allowing me direct access to the District Registers under the Payment of Wages Act of 1936. I had excellent co-operation from the office staff. My thanks are also due to the Director of Agriculture and the Director, Bureau of Economics and Statistics, Gujarat State. They kindly allowed me direct access to the data available with their offices.

I am equally thankful to the University Grants Commission for awarding to me a grant for computational work and books in my research study for the Ph.D. degree.

The Librarian and the Staff of Smt. Hansa Mehta Library, Maharaja Sayajirao University of Baroda, gave me utmost co-operation. I am indebted to them.

Mr. C.S.R. Murthy, Statistician, Computer Centre, Physical Research Laboratory, Ahmedabad was very helpful in my major computational work.

I am highly indebted to Mr. J.S. Kelkar for the speedy and excellent typing of my thesis. Due to his technical insight and meticulous nature my burden was considerably reduced at the typing stage. Mr. J.V. Shah helped me in graphs and map. I am thankful to him also. Mr. G. P. Malpathak, Lecturer in Geology took keen interest in my work and was very kind to sit with me for minute checking.

Throughout the period of my work I remained highly pre-occupied. It did mean some neglect of my wife and children. But anxieties and excitements were understood and shared. I owe much to my wife for her silent contribution in my work.
