

Acknowledgment

It is an extremely difficult task for me to acknowledge in few words the people who helped me during different phases of my doctoral research work. When I glance back in the past eight years, many people genuinely facilitated me directly or indirectly and it is because of these people that I could smoothly reach this destination.

First of all I am indebted to my guide, Dr. Pushpa Robin (PR madam) for accepting me as a Ph.D. student under her guidance.. Words can't be enough to describe about her patience and cordial manners through which she kept on motivating me throughout the period along with excellent research guidance. I will forever admire her for enabling me to complete my research work under demanding situations by taking care of almost everything required. Indeed madam, without your blessing and faith in me, I would not have completed this work.

I express my deep sense of gratitude to Prof. Naresh Kumar (Head, Department of Biochemistry) (NK sir), a hardcore man of fundamental science, whose critical comments and advice especially during initial period of choosing the topic for research in 2003 set me going. I also thank former Head, Prof. Sarita Gupta for providing me excellent research facilities.

I am really thankful to all the members of the Biochemistry Department whose contribution made a very conducive and friendly environment for my work.

I would thank my labmates Vijay, Purna , Ritu, dissertation students Prithvi and Asha for their enormous support and valuable scientific discussions. Thank you guys!!. I am also thankful to Iqbal, Vikas and other students of 2003-04 batch for their valuable suggestions whenever required without any hesitation which really helped me a lot at various instances.

I am especially thankful to all teachers of the department for providing conducive environment for my work. I am really thankful to all administrative staff of the department for all their help whenever needed.

I am grateful to Prof. Tara Mehta, late Prof. Shaila Telang for encouraging me to stick to the selected topic and task.

I deeply acknowledge the University for providing me the required extension in the completion of this work.

I am thankful to Dr. GOPALAN SELVARAJ, PLANT BIOTECHNOLOGY INSTITUTE, NRCC, CANADA who kindly gifted the gene of interest cox (choline oxidase) in the form of Binary vector pHS724. I extend my thanks to the reviewers of manuscripts, whose valuable suggestions aided in value addition to the present research work. I also thank all the scientists and friends who had sent me the required reprints of their articles, which really helped me to understand the subject and methodology.

I am extremely grateful to Dr. A M Dave, Dr. KD Bhatt, Shri PM Sutaria and Shri TG Panara.

I am grateful to God for giving me wonderful parents and family members, without whom it was not possible for me to complete my research work. I can't thank my late mother for imbibing all those qualities which made me what I am today. My father who figuratively taught me not to give up anything in life and whom I always found standing beside me in every up and down that came my way. His critically productive advise made me stick to the task. I am really grateful to my brother Dr. Santosh, who always remains an academic role model not only for me but to the whole generation in our family. His depth of understanding and analytical abilities have had the best possible solution for every kind of problem. His invaluable and hidden inspirations out of his gigantic career as a Astrophysics Scientist would remain forever in my mind in anything I do. A special mention of my uncle Shri Sureshkaka whose succinct suggestions out of his vast experience, knowledge and discussions on almost every aspect of life helped me to remain focused throughout this period.

Everyone needs some special persons in life whose endless support smoothen the path of life. I can't thank my wife Bhagyashree who was all the time prepared to sacrifice anything for my completing PhD. Without her continuous motivational force which always boosted my morale, this couldn't have been possible. I can't forget to mention my lovely kids Paritosh and Nachiket who in themselves are real inspiration for me.

I am forever thankful to Pujya Nana Maharaj and Almighty God for drawing different chapters of my life which gradually helped me evolve...!!!
