Since the theme of this thesis is interdisciplinary in nature I have been fortunately compelled to consult a few eminent professors in various fields of study. Here I express my thanks to Professor Mrs. Aparna Sen, Department of History, Delhi University, Professor G.S. Amur, Department of English, Marathawada University, Professor D.D. Mahulkar, Professor (Mrs.) Bharatiben Mody, Dr. C.K. Sheshadri, Dr. O.P. Joneja and Dr. P.C. Kar, of M.S. University of Baroda. Finally my sincere gratitude to my guide, Dr. Birje Patil, formerly of the Department of English, M.S. University of Baroda, without whose guidance and encouragement mine would have been but an abortive attempt.

I also record my debt of gratitude to the University Grants Commission for an initial grant and to the following libraries that have rendered me invaluable help in completing this thesis:

- * The British Council Library, Bombay.
- * India International Centre, New Delhi.
- * Bombay University Library, Bombay.
- * British Council Library, Lending Division, Edinburgh.
- * Smt. Hansa Mehta Library, Baroda.
- * The New York Public Library, New York.
- * Baroda Central Library, Baroda.
