

Acknowledgements

Writing a thesis inevitably entails indebtedness to many people and institutions. During the course of this research, I have received guidance, support, encouragement, camaraderie, love, hospitality and hope from many people in many places. This is the place to express my sense gratitude to all of them and in the process also to reinforce the bonds I shared or continue to share with most of them.

First and foremost, my deepest gratitude is to my supervisor and teacher Professor Deeptha Achar for her constant guidance and supervision of this thesis at every stage. She knew my area of interest and encouraged me to move away from a conventional topic to explore a new area. So, the subject of this thesis is as much hers as it is mine. Her suggestions about the reading required for this work were invaluable. It was her thinking through my problems and incisive comments on my work which gave this thesis the present shape. Without her help in developing the theoretical frameworks and in selecting the categories to analyse the three figures under this study, this thesis would have been impossible. Working on her comments made my doctoral research a thrilling intellectual experience. Her constant reiteration to think slowly made me read texts more carefully and write more systematically. She has remained generous with her personal time, despite her own multiple intellectual and social commitments, to discuss this work at various stages. I have to thank her separately for allowing me free and unrestricted access to her personal library, so much so that as I write this, at least one-third of the books in my study have been either borrowed or just lifted from her library. My thanks to her extends beyond the professional help. This thesis has seen the light of the day because of her belief in this project right from the first day. For a very long period of time, when I was beset with doubts in my own abilities, it was her phone calls which got me out of the sense of despondency and gave me courage to work. I wish to thank her for all this. I owe this thesis to Professor Deeptha Achar as I owe the career in academia to her encouragements as a teacher during my post-graduate days.

Here, I wish to express my thanks to Professor Deeptha Achar's family (Santosh, Kathya, Manu) for putting up with my constant intrusion into their family time almost on the weekly basis during the last six months and then on the daily basis during the last fortnight of this thesis writing. Not only were they gracious but also extended warmth and hospitality. Thank you.

I express my thanks to Professor Sudha Pandya and Professor M. F. Salat, both heads of the department of English at different points of time during this work for their help and for words of encouragement. At this point, I also wish to express my heartfelt thanks to my teachers at the M. S. University of Baroda, especially Dr Susan Bhatt, Professor P. C. Kar, Dr M. T. Ansari and Professor Bharat Mehta, for encouraging me as a student to read and reflect.

I acknowledge with thanks the help and support given by the staff of the following libraries:

- Hansa Mehta Library, The M. S. University of Baroda, Baroda
- Centre for Contemporary Theory Library, Baroda
- Maulana Azad Library, Aligarh Muslim University, Aligarh
- University Library, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi
- Nehru Memorial and Museum Library, New Delhi

- Central Library, M. D. Gramseva Mahavidyalaya, Sadra
- Central Library, Gujarat Vidyapith, Ahmedabad
- Sampurn Kranti Vidyalaya Library, Vedchhi

I wish to express my thanks to Professor P. C. Kar, Director of the Centre for Contemporary Theory, Baroda for his encouragement throughout this work. Even before I undertook this research work, he granted me a month-long Library Fellowship at the Centre for Contemporary Theory where I read and thought about the question of nationalism in social sciences. It was this fellowship which encouraged me to think more deeply through the categories of nation and nationalism.

I wish to express my heartfelt thanks to my friend Dr Bini B. S. for her meticulous copyediting and proofreading of this entire thesis. Her comments forced me to think more carefully. Thanks also for the love and care she showed for my work and constant encouragement during all these years. Many thanks to Dr Rajan Barrett for his unconditional friendship, help and support and also for constantly asking that supremely irritating classical question: Amar, what is the stage of your PhD? Thank you for the intellectual stimulus.

The first draft of chapter IV on Gandhi and vegetarianism was presented for the first time in a close reading group. I wish to thank members of the group—Professor Deeptha Achar, Dr Santosh Dash, Dr V. Sebastian and Dr Rajan Barrett—for their extensive comments which helped me in developing it into a full chapter.

I wish to record my sense of gratitude to Professor Lajwanti Chatani (Baroda), Professor Shan Muhammad (Aligarh), Dr Rizwan Quaiser (New Delhi) and Vikas Gupta (New Delhi) for their help in clarifying my doubts and for advice in locating books.

Research for this thesis took me to Aligarh (2010 and 2012) and New Delhi (2010). People who were unknown to me at that time (and now they are among friends on whom I can depend on) offered gracious hospitality to me and made my stay comfortable. Thanks to Dr Shahbaz Ali Khan (at Aligarh) for friendship, shayari, Hindi poetry and love from the day one of our meeting. I owe thanks to Rashid Ali (at New Delhi) for helping me access JNU Library and for opening his house for me for the period of my stay in New Delhi.

It was the M. A. class of 2005 where it all began. The two years from 2003-2005 remains the best years of my life. Without doubt, it was the class of 2005 which made me look at everything in a new light. It was rigorous and it was fun. My classmates Mandvi, Vidya, Neha, Mukta, Gayithri, Jasmine, Anusha and Atul kept the atmosphere in the department vibrant. With Nitesh, Vinod and Johanna joining in, we virtually monopolised the corridor of the teachers' building to discuss, debate, share (food) and fight (over inane as well as profound issues). There was never a dull moment during those two years. Thank you all.

Johanna showed me what commitment to work and society means and by her sheer honesty to her work inspired me to engage with my own work with more passion and integrity. She was instrumental in getting me in touch with her friends in Aligarh and New Delhi where I went for the purpose of this research. Thank you for love, affection and friendship.

Nitesh has remained my guiding light and ready reference for all matters of political science for more than fifteen years now. He continues to answer all my queries (ranging from serious to banal) with equal seriousness. Thank you for friendship, love and tremendous amount of intellectual input. Dr Dhananjay Rai at Central University of Gujarat and Dr Prem

Anand Mishra at Gujarat Vidyapith have helped me read Gandhi more critically. Thank you both.

I owe thanks to Dr Sudarshan Iyengar, former Vice Chancellor of Gujarat Vidyapith for constantly reminding me to focus on the PhD. Also, his lectures on Gandhi at different occasions alerted me to various misconceptions related to Gandhi. Thanks is also due to Professor Nimisha Shukla (Gujarat Vidyapith) for being the constant source of encouragement and friendship. Her presence at Ahmedabad campus makes life easier professionally as well as personally. I would also like to thank Professor Vidyut Joshi for his interest in my academic and research work and for constantly reminding me to finish the PhD and take up new projects. At this moment, I miss Narayan Desai, former Chancellor of Gujarat Vidyapith who passed away just some months before the completion of this work. It is to him that I owe my knowledge of the intimate life of Gandhi. I put on record my sense of gratitude to him for listening patiently to my questions and comments on Gandhi.

I thank the Coordinator of my college as well as the management of Gujarat Vidyapith for granting me a leave of five weeks during the final stages of this thesis. I also would like to express my gratitude to Dr Poonam Mittal who was the Director at my former place of work in Bardoli when this work started. She wanted to see this thesis finished sooner than it is happening.

Iliyas, my friend and a fellow PhD candidate forced me to work hard by going about his own work in a disciplined manner. I thank him for his companionship during the last leap of this thesis. Without his company, working on this thesis would have not been so much fun.

I wish to thank my friends, colleagues and well-wishers at my past as well as present workplace as life would not have been the same without them. I thank Divya, Nehal, Dhara, Manika, Mitali, Hardik, Arpana, Dharamendra, Nipam, Ashish and Shefali, Gaurangbhai and Nileshbhai at Bardoli; Dhwanil, Dhara, Yogesh, Divyesh, Kaushik, Jitendra and Pradeep Acharya at Sadra; Ramnath, Shruti, Vikas, Anish and Bhavika at Gandhinagar; Dr Gita Vishwanath, Dr Arti Majumdar, Dr Bela Desai, Parth Dave and Dhiren Parmar at Baroda; Dr Surendra Gadekar and Umadidi at Vedchhi for their support and wishes. Atul has remained a companion and colleague right from the under-graduate days. I owe him thanks for help with bibliography and encouragement throughout this work.

Life at Sadra would not have been worthwhile without two people who have become my second family. Thank you Vikram and Lajju for making me feel at home and putting up with my tantrums. I thank Vikram also for forcing me to rethink my position on many public issues and it is to him that I owe my understanding of questions concerning the education system in India and why the struggle to save public education is more urgent than ever. Thank you for your constant challenges to my beliefs and also for your tremendous infectious energy. It is entirely my fault that I am pretty unresponsive to such positive infections.

Finally, it has to be the family. Amma, my brother Pramod and sister-in-law Anita tolerated my eccentricity and continue to do so without complaint. They have given me freedom from the routine household affairs to pursue my work. Their forbearance is a lesson in humility to me. Kanishka—my niece—has been a bundle of joy and love ever since her arrival seven years ago. I end this list of gratitude by remembering my eldest brother Rajesh—the guiding presence in my life from the time I began my schooling till the end of his own life. He would have been happy to see me doing this research. All my endeavours remain a dedication to his memory. Miss you so much.
